Introduction

While collecting the North Carolina Revolutionary War pension applications for a file in the North Carolina State Archives Search Room, it became evident how important the many naturalization records would be to genealogists.

Upon completion of this Revolutionary War pension project in 1981, it was concluded that no laws would be broken if the records were copied. One or two days a week were devoted to this project for the next seven years.

These records were collected from the North Carolina County and State court minutes and the county miscellaneous records for the years 1792-1862. Copies have been made of each record located and the copy placed in a file in the North Carolina State Archives Search Room. These are listed under the naturalization applicants name. The source of each item is noted on the reverse side of the copy.

These items may prove to be the Declaration of Intent and/or the Naturalization. Occasionally the intent was filed at the port of entry and this fact is sometimes noted in the naturalization. If the applicant has been a resident for the required two years, the Intent and the Naturalization may be found in the same court session.

The genealogical information found in these papers varies greatly. Sometimes you will find the wives maiden name and all the children listed. Other times, there will be a bare minimum of information about the applicant. It is rare that you will find a signature of the applicant because most of the records came from court minutes.

Copies are available for a nominal fee from the N. C. State Archives Search Room.

Article I of the United States Constitution gives to Congress the power "To establish a uniform rule of naturalization. . ." On March 6, 1790, the first federal naturalization law, which was probably based on the Virginia statute enacted in 1779, required two years of residence in the United States and one year in the state. The applicant was required to take an oath to support the Constitution; the oath was to be filed in any common law court of record. At that time, such courts in North Carolina were the county courts of pleas and quarter sessions and the district superior courts.

Five years later, that legislation was repealed and was replaced by an act of January 29, 1795, which permitted any free white alien to become a citizen upon filing a declaration of intent three years before applying for admission to citizenship. The declaration and oath were to be filed in a state court or in the U.S. district or circuit court. Five years of residence in the United States were required, of which at least one year was to have been in the state or territory where the declaration was made. The applicant, in making oath, had to renounce any title of nobility as well as allegiance to a foreign ruler.

Three years later, as a part of the Alien and Sedition Laws, on June 18, 1798, the requirements for obtaining citizenship were made more stringent. Fourteen years residence in the United States were required, of which five were to be in the state or territory in which intention was declared. In addition, the clerk of the court before which the declaration was made was to forward a copy of the statement, and to submit a register showing name, age, prior nationality, residence, and occupation to the United States Secretary of State. None of these registers for North Carolina have survived. All free, white aliens twenty-one years of age or older arriving after June 18, 1798, had to register within forty-eight hours with the district court, port collector, or officer subsequently designated.

The 1798 legislation was repealed in 1802, when Congress passed an act that established basic naturalization procedures for the remainder of the nineteenth century. The alien was required to declare his intention, three years before admission to citizenship, before a state, territorial, or federal court and to renounce his foreign allegiance at that time. He was also to declare that he would support the Constitution. Residence of five years in the United States was required, one year of which had to be in the state or territory in which he lived at the time of making declaration. All of the required proceedings were to be recorded by the clerk of the court in which they were held, and all free, white aliens, upon becoming citizens, were to be registered by the clerk of the court in the district in which they were residing or by the clerk of some other court of record. It was further provided that "every court of record in any individual state, having common law jurisdiction, and a seal and clerk or prothonotary, shall be considered a district court. . ."

The registration requirement of the 1802 law was repealed in 1828.

Although minor adjustments were made in the naturalization requirements, it was not until 1876 that declarations were allowed to be filed with the clerk of court. The basic procedures of the 1802 act, however, remained in effect until 1906.

The Constitution of the Confederate States of America, which was ratified by a convention in North Carolina on June 6, 1861, empowered its congress "To establish uniform laws of naturalization . . . throughout the Confederate States. . ." Neither the Provisional Congress nor the Congress of the Confederate States enacted legislation relating to naturalization.

The courts in North Carolina that had common law jurisdiction, and thus were authorized to grant citizenship, included the county courts of pleas and quarter sessions, the district superior courts until 1806, the county superior courts after 1806, the Court of Conference from 1804 until 1818, and the Supreme Court after 1818.

Thank You

The Naturalization project could not have been completed without the kind help and cooperation of the Search Room staff, George Stevenson, and State Archivist David Olson. A special double thank you to retired State Archivist Thornton Mitchell, who allowed me to start the project in the first place and for his work on the laws pertaining to naturalization. Special thanks to EAC for all of his encouragement and assistance.
